Hong Kong Convocation Honors Containerization Pioneer

The convocation ceremony held at the Hong Kong Convention and Exhibition Centre on March 30 celebrated the graduation of Ivey's newest group of Executive MBAs, and honored John Meredith of Hutchison Port Holdings (HPH) with an honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

Based on his vision for more efficient global trade, Meredith became a containerization advocate in 1972. He saw the potential in containerization shipping which replaced the method of packing cargo directly into a ship's hold. Under his leadership as HPH's group managing director, the company grew from a single container port in Hong Kong to become the world's largest privately-owned container port operator.

In his address, Meredith urged the graduates to try new challenges. He shared his life experience, emphasizing the importance of discipline and the part it played in survival, the importance of how to get along with others, and the importance of the use of power and authority and the responsibilities it entails. "Be true to yourself and always build on and make full use of your previous experiences," concluded Meredith. EMBA information session May 14, 2008 7:30 – 9:00 pm

NCSOFT CORPORATION Ho-Geun Lee, Sang-Hoon Lee, Hyung-Jin Kim Teaching Note: 8807M61

The case presents the points of contention and issues facing NCsoft Corporation as of 2007. As the leader in online games, NCsoft has the areatest future growth potential inside and outside of Korea; the president has a number of issues to consider: What is NCsoft's most effective plan for maintaining its top position in Korea and its competitiveness in the world market? How should the company pursue diversification of its game offerings from a small number of major games to other online game genres, such as casual games? What are the important factors NCsoft needs to consider to achieve "glocalization" as a basis for building a global online game development and publishing company? What should be NCsoft's response to the diversified connection channels and game platforms and the rise of a ubiquitous computing environment? How should the negative perceptions and side effects of playing online games be dealt with? In addition, how should NCsoft prepare to compete with other industries that are expected to become competitors with digitalcontent online games?

9B07E022 INVENSIS TECHNOLOGIES (P) LTD: A GLOBAL BPO SERVICE PROVIDER FROM INDIA

Vaidyanathan Jayaraman, Yadong Luo Teaching Note: 8B07E22

The executive director of Invensis Technologies (P) Ltd. met with the chief operating officer and vicepresident of human resources to address two major challenges that the company was facing. The first challenge was the increased pressure on Invensis to remain competitive and cut costs while providing premium customer service. Clients were expecting more every day from their business process operations. The other challenge was that of building an engaged and committed workforce. While the attrition rate in the information technology (IT) sector was low, the IT-enabled services (ITES) sector continued to show high levels of attrition. The executive director wondered whether the company's structured approach towards working on an outsourcing project would help build credibility and differentiate it in the market place and how he could reduce the high attrition rate of ITES.
